PREFACE

This episode is taken from the Vana-Parva of the Mahābhārata,—the Great Indian Epic,—which is an ocean of such gems. It is related by Mārkandeya, a sage, to Yudhishthira who was leading a forest-life. I need not apologize for bringing out this edition as, in spite of its being a very good, interesting and instructive story, it is not, as yet, published separately. It can serve as a book for supplementary reading in any Board or University.

Translation in English and critical notes are appended at the end to help those who are unable to understand the original. The translation follows literally the original without breaking English idiom and notes elucidate only those forms which are archaic. It is hoped that it will prove useful to those for whom it is meant.

My thanks are due to the publishers, The Bharat Publishing House of Jodhpur but for whose pressing demand the book would not have seen the light of the day.

TRANSLATION OF THE EPISODE OF SĀVITRĪ

Translation of the Episode of Savitri

CHAPTER I

SĀVITRĪ GOES IN SEARCH OF A HUSBAND

Yudhishthira said :

1. I do not so much grieve for myself, nor these (my) brothers, O great sage, nor the loss of (my) kingdom as I do for this daughter of Drupada.

2. When at the game of dice by those wicked souls (Kauravas) we were afflicted, we were delivered by Krishnā (Draupadi) and she was forcibly carried away from the forest by Jayadratha.

3. Have you ever seen or heard of any lady as chaste and blessed as this Draupadi ?

Mārkandeya said :

4. Listen, O king, how the exalted merit of noble ladies, O Yudhishthira, was entirely obtained by Sāvitrī, a princess.

5. There was a king in the country of Madras, of a virtuous soul and extremely pious. He was well inclined towards Brāhmanas, high-souled, firm in promise and one who had subdued his senses.

6. A sacrificer, foremost among donors, clever and beloved by people living in cities and the country. The lord of the earth and Ashwapati by name, he was devoted to the welfare of all beings.

7. He was of a forgiving temperament and truthful speech and had conquered his senses but had no issue. And as he advanced in age, he was grieved (at this).

8. And with the object of getting offspring, he observed rigid vows. He began to take a measured amount of food at stated times, lead a life of a celibate and restrain his senses.

9. O best of kings, offering a hundred thousand oblations to the god of fire in honour of Sāvitrī (reciting Gāyatrī Mantra) he ate only a measured quantity of food at the sixth watch of the day.

10–11. He passed eighteen years observing these vows and at the end of the eighteenth year Sāvitrī was pleased with him and getting out from the sacrificial fire with great delight in an embodied form, the goddess Sāvitrī, O king, showed herself to him and bent on giving boons, she spoke these words to the monarch.

Sāvitrī said :

12. With thy pure celibacy, self-restraint, vows and with thy concentrated devotion, O king, I am gratified.

13. O Ashwapati, king of Madras, choose the desired boon. No disregard to your duty should by any means be shown.

Ashwapati said :

14. This act has been begun by me for getting issue and with the desire of attaining virtue. May many sons, O goddess, be born unto me worthy of my family.

15. If you are pleased with me, O goddess, this boon

I choose. Continuity of the line is a great virtue, so the twice-born have said to me.

Sāvitrī said :

16. Having already known this thy intention, O king, I had spoken of thy sons to that revered Grandsire.

17. Through the favour, therefore, of the Self-create, there shall be born unto thee, O gentle king, a daughter of great spirit.

18. You should by no means make any reply. Being pleased, I say this unto you by the mandate of the Grandsire.

Mārkandeya said :

19. Having accepted the words of Sāvitrī by saying "So be it", the king again pleased her, saying "this will happen soon."

20. When Sāvitrī vanished, the king went to his city and lived in his own kingdom, ruling righteously his subjects.

21. And when some time had passed, that king, firm in his vow, begat offspring on his virtuous eldest queen.

22. And then, O bull (excellent) of the Bharatas, the embryo in the womb of the princess in the family of Manu increased like the lord of stars in the sky during the white fortnight.

23. And when the time came she brought forth a daughter with lotus-eyes and that best of kings joyfully performed the ceremonies on her account.

24. And as she was given by the goddess Sāvitrī who was pleased and to whom sacrifices were offered, Brāhmanas and her father named her Sāvitrī.

25. That princess grew like S'ree (The goddess of wealth) incarnate and in due time she attained her youth.

26. Beholding her with slender waist and ample hips resembling a golden image, people thought her to be an angel.

27. And checked (overpowered) by her lustre, none could choose her with lotus-leaf-eyes, burning, as it were, by her spirit.

28. Now on some auspicious day, having fasted and taken a full over-head bath she went to the tutelary deity and sacrificing to the fire-god according to rites, made Brahmanas recite Mantras.

29. Then collecting flowers offered to God, that lady, appearing like S'ree in form presented herself before her high-souled father.

30. And having reverenced his feet and offered the flowers she had brought, that maiden of graceful form folded her hands and stood by the side of the king.

31. Then, seeing his daughter, resembling a celestial damsel, attaining puberty, and not being sought by (prospective) bride-grooms, the king became sad.

The King said:

32. Daughter, this is the time for giving you in marriage and yet none is asking me. Therefore, do you yourself seek for a husband equal to you in qualities (merits).

33. That man who may be desired by you should be notified to me by you. I shall bestow you after deliberation. Choose as you desire.

34. I have indeed heard as it was being recited by the twice-born in religious scriptures. Do you also, O auspicious girl, listen to me as I tell that to you.

35. "A father that does not bestow is censured and a husband that does not go to his wife in season is abused; so also, a son who does not protect his mother when her husband is dead goes to disgrace."

36. Hearing these words of mine, hurry up to seek for your husband. Do you act in a way so that I may not be censured by gods.

Mārkandeya said:

37. Having thus addressed his daughter and his old ministers, he ordered the attendants, saying (urging) "Go (follow her)."

38. Then, bashfully, as it were, bowing down to the feet of her father, that meek maiden, obeying the words of her father, went out without hesitation.

39. Ascending a golden chariot and accompanied by old ministers, she went to the charming penance-groves of royal sages.

40. There, O dear son, bowing down to the feet of the aged revered people, she gradually went to all the woods.

41. Thus that king's daughter distributing wealth in all sacred places, she went to several places belonging to the principal twice-born.

Thus ends the first chapter of the episode of Sāvitrī in the description of the greatness of chaste ladies of the forest section of the great epic.

CHAPTER II

NĀRADA'S SPEECH

Mārkandeya said :

1. Now, when once that king, the lord of the Madras, in the company of Nārada, was seated in his court, engaged in conversation,

2. Sāvitri, having gone to various sacred places and hermitages, came to the house of her father, accompanied by counsellors.

3. Beholding her father sitting with Nārada, that blessed lady touched the feet of both of them with her head and saluted.

Nārada said :

4. Whither had this thy daughter gone? Whence also does she come, O king? And why dost thou not bestow her who is young on a husband?

Ashvapati answered :

5. It was on this very business, indeed, that she had been sent and she returns only now. Hear from her, O celestial sage, the husband she has selected.

Mārkandeya said :

6. That blessed maid, ordered by her father to relate in detail, at once obeyed and said this.

Sāvitrī said :

7. There was, amongst the Shālvas, a righteous Kshatriya king, known as Dyumatsena and he became blind after some time.

8. This blind king possessed of intelligence had an only son. And on account of this very defect he was robbed of his kingdom by an old enemy living in the vicinity.

9. Accompanied by his wife with an infant-child he set off towards a forest and entering a big forest he, of great vows, began to practise austerities.

10. His son, born in the city and grown in the penance-grove, named Satyavān, worthy of me, has been accepted by me in my mind as my husband.

Nārada said :

11. Alas, O king, a great wrong has been done by Sāvitrī, since, unknowingly she hath chosen Satyavān, though of good qualities.

12. His father speaketh the truth and his mother also is truthful in her speech and so, the Brāhmanas have named him Satyavān—the truthful.

13. When a child, he was very fond of horses, and used to make horses of clay and also to draw pictures of horses and so he is also called Chitrāshwa—a painter of horses.

The King said :

14. Is that prince Satyavān who is devoted to his father possessed of energy and intelligence and forgiveness? Is he brave?

Nārada replied :

15. He is energetic (brilliant) like the sun, intelligent like the god of speech—Brihaspati, brave like Indra, the great, and forgiving like the earth.

Ashwapati (then) asked :

16. And is the prince Satyavān generous in gifts and devoted to Brāhmanas? Is he handsome and liberal and lovely in appearance?

Nārada replied :

17. The mighty son of Dyumatsena is like Rantideva, the son of Sānkriti, in charity according to his power, like Shibi, the son of Ushinara, in his devotion to Brāhmanas and truthfulness.

18. He is generous like Yayāti and lovely in look like the Moon. In beauty of form he is like one of the twin Ashwins.

19. He is self-controlled, mild, brave, truthful and restrained in his senses. He is devoted to his friends, free from malice, modest and brilliant.

20. In brief, it is said by those who are advanced in penance and character that he is always straight-forward and firm in moral rectitude.

Ashwapati said :

21. Reverend sir, thou tellest me that he is endowed with all good qualities; but tell me his defects also if he hath any.

Nārada said :

22. He hath only one defect which stands, transgressing his qualities, and that defect is incapable of being passed over even with the great efforts.

23. He hath only one defect and none else. That Satyavān, within a year from today, short-lived as he is, will cast off his body.

(At this) The King said :

24. Come, Sāvitrī, go and choose another, O blessed girl. This is a very great defect in him and it surpasses all his merits.

25. As this revered Nārada, honoured (even) by gods, says, he, with short life, will throw away his body within a year.

(Hearing this) Sāvitrī said :

26. The division of the ancestral property is made only once, a daughter is given away in marriage only once and only once does a man say "I give"; These three things take place only once.

27. Whether long-lived or short-lived, with merits or without merits, the husband is chosen by me only once; I shall not choose another.

28. Having settled a thing in mind, it is then said in words and afterwards it is carried out in practice. My mind is a proof of it.

Nārada said :

29. O best of men, the resolution of thy daughter, Sāvitrī, is firm. By no means can she be checked from this.

30. In no other man are those virtues (to be found) which exist in Satyavān, indeed. The bestowal of thy daughter is verily approved of by me.

The King said :

31. What is said by your honour cannot be shaken off and is true. I shall act in this very way as your worship is my preceptor.

Nārada said :

32. May there be no obstacle in the bestowal of your daughter, Sāvitrī. I shall now depart. May it be well with you all.

Mārkandeya said:

33. (74). Having thus addressed Nārada rose up and went to heaven, and the king, on his part, got ready everything connected with the marriage.

Thus ends the chapter second.

CHAPTER III

SĀVITRĪ—THE GOOD HOUSEWIFE

Mārkandeya said :

1. Now brooding over that very speech (of Nārada) regarding his daughter's marriage, the king brought together all those materials required for the nuptials.

2. Then summoning all the old Brāhmanas and sacrificial (Ritvijas) with the family priests, he set out with his daughter on an auspicious day.

3. And going to the holy (मेध्यं) forest and arriving at the hermitage of Dyumatsena, the king in the company of Brāhmanas approached that royal sage on foot.

4. Then he beheld there the illustrious blind king seated on a holy seat (वृसी) of the sacred Kusha grass spread under a Shāla tree.

5. After duly worshipping the royal sage, the king (Ashwapati), well-controlled in his speech introduced himself.

6. Thereupon, offering him materials of worship (such as milk, curds, honey etc.) and a seat and a cow, that virtuous monarch asked the king (his guest) the cause of his visit.

7. The king related everything regarding his intentions and the necessary duty with reference to Satyavān.

Ashwapati said :

8. O royal sage, this beautiful girl, by name Sāvitrī, is my daughter. O thou versed in morals, do thou, according to our code of laws, accept her from me as your daughter-in-law.

Dyumatsena said :

9. Deprived of our kingdom, we have resorted to the forest, we practise virtue, leading the life of well-restrained ascetics. How will thy daughter, unworthy of a forest residence, live in this hermitage and suffer this hardship?

Ashwapati said :

10. When my daughter and I know very well that happiness and misery are born and destroyed (are not stationary), such words should not be used for a person of my type; I have come here, O king, with a definite resolution.

11. Through friendship I am bowing down to you; it does not behove you to kill my hope. Through love I have come to you; you should not say 'no' to me (decline or disregard).

12. I am worthy of you and you are worthy of me and both of us are fit (for an alliance). Therefore, accept my daughter as your daughter-in-law and wife of Satyavān.

Dyumatsena said :

13. This my alliance with you was already desired by me. But being consequently deprived of my kingdom, I was hesitating.

14. Let this desire, now, which was formerly entertained by me, be accomplished this same day. You are, verily, a welcome guest to me.

15. Then, collecting together all the twice-born residing in the hermitages, the two kings celebrated the marriage with due rites.

16. Having bestowed his daughter with suitable dress and ornaments, Ashwapati went to his own house in great joy.

17. Satyavān also, having obtained that wife endowed with all virtues, was highly pleased and she, on her part, rejoiced on getting him, whom she wanted to get, as her husband.

18. When her father had gone, she threw off all her ornaments and accepted barks and clothes dyed in red.

19. By her services and virtues and humility (love) and self-restraint and by offices argeeable to all, she pleased everybody.

20. She pleased her mother-in-law by attending to her person and by dressing her and doing such other services, her father-in-law by offering him a divine worship and controlling her speech.

21. So also, she pleased her lord by her sweet words, her skill, her calmness and her service in private.

22. Then, living thus in that hermitage and practising penance, some time, O Bharata, passed away.

23. But the words spoken by Nārada were present in the mind of Sāvitrī, day and night and so she was ever in a sorrowful mood.

Thus ends the Chapter Third

CHAPTER IV

THE AUSTERE PENANCE OF SAVITRI

Mārkaṇḍeya said :

1. Then once when a number of days—much time—had passed, the hour when Satyavān was to die arrived.

2. The words uttered by Nārada were ever present in the heart of Sāvitrī who was counting every day that was passing.

3. Having ascertained that her lord was to die on the fourth day, she observed a vow (of fast) continuously for three days and nights.

4. Hearing of that vow of hers the king was much grieved and, rising up said these words to Sāvitrī in order to soothe her.

Dyumatsena said :

5. This vow that is begun by you is very hard, O princess. To live thus without food for three nights is extremely difficult.

Sāvitrī said :

6. You need not be sorry, father; I shall be able to practise it through. I have undertaken it with a certain resolution and perseverance and perseverance is the cause of success.

Dyumatsena said :

7. I can by no means ask you to break your vow; one of my type should rather say—"Do you complete your vow?"

Mārkandeya said :

8. Having said this to her the high-minded Dyumatsena stopped and Sāvitrī, continuing to fast began to appear lean like a wooden doll.

9. O bull among Bharatas, the whole night passed while Sāvitrī, in great sorrow, was brooding over the fact that her husband would die the next day.

10. When (the next day) the sun had come up (from the horizon) about four hands (युगं-हस्तचतुष्कं) thinking that that was the (fatal) day and finishing her morning rites, she offered oblations to the flaming fire.

11. She, then, bowed down to all the aged Brāhmanas and father-in-law and mother-in-law in regular order, and stood before them, folding her hands and restraining her senses.

12. And for Sāvitrī all the ascetics dwelling in the penance-grove uttered agreeable and auspicious blessings that she should never be separated from her husband (never suffer widowhood).

13. Sāvitrī merged in contemplation and concentration accepted all those benedictions of ascetics, saying in her mind—" So be it."

14. And the king's daughter, expecting the hour and the moment and reflecting on the words of Nārada, was much grieved.

15. Then the mother-in-law and the father-in-law,

O best of Indians, said, out of love, these words to the princess seated in a retired corner.

16. The vow as it is prescribed is completed by you. The time for your meal has come; so do what is to be done next.

Sāvitrī said:

17. Now that I have completed the proposed vow, I shall take my food when the sun sets. This is the resolve in my heart and this vow have I taken.

Mārkandeya said:

18. When Sāvitrī was saying thus with regard to her food, Satyavān, taking his axe upon his shoulder, set out for the woods.

19. Sāvitrī, however, said to her husband: "It behoves you not to go alone. I will accompany you. I cannot bear separation from you. (I cannot leave you alone.)"

Satyavān said:

20. You had never gone to the forest before, and the path, O noble lady, is troublesome; and you are reduced by the fast on account of your vow. How can you walk on foot?

Sāvitrī:

21. I feel no languor on account of the fast nor do I feel any exhaustion too. It does not become you, therefore, to prevent me as I had made up my mind to go.

Satyavān:

22. If you are resolved to go, I shall do what is agreeable to you. Do you, however, take the permission of my parents so that I may not be guilty of any fault.

Mārkandeya continued :

23. (On this) Sāvitrī, of great vows, saluted her mother-in-law and the father-in-law and said: "Here is my husband going to the woods for bringing fruits.

24. I wish to accompany him if permitted by the revered lady-mother and the father-in-law. Today I cannot bear separation from him.

25. Your son is setting out for the sake of his elders and the sacrificial sacred fire. He cannot be dissuaded. He could be prevented had he to go to the forest on any other mission.

26. I did not go out of the hermitage for a little less than a year. I am, indeed, extremely curious to see the blossoming forest."

Dyumatsena said :

27. Since Sāvitrī was given to me by her father as my daughter-in-law, I do not remember if any words attended with a request were ever spoken by her.

28. Let my daughter-in-law, therefore, obtain her object as she desires. No inattention, however, my daughter, be shown to Satyavān on the way.

Mārkandeya continued :

29. Permitted by both of them the illustrious Sāvitrī departed with her lord smiling apparently but with a grieving heart.

30. And that lady of large eyes saw on all sides picturesque and delightful woods inhabited by swarms of peacocks.

31. And Satyavān sweetly said to Sāvitrī: "Behold these rivers of sacred currents and these excellent trees (नग) adorned with blossoms."

32. But the blameless Sāvitrī continued to watch her lord in all moods and recollecting the words of the sage, she at times thought him to be already dead.

33. And with her heart cut in twain that damsel, of soft gait, kept on following her lord expecting that (fatal) hour.

Thus ends the Chapter Fourth

CHAPTER V

THE APPEARANCE OF THE GOD OF DEATH AND HIS FAVOUR

Mārkandeya said :

1. Then the powerful Satyavān, accompanied by his wife, plucked (took) fruits and filled his bag or vessel (कठिनं) with them. Then he began to cut branches of trees (wood).

2. While he was hewing wood, he began to perspire, indeed, and on account of that exercise his head began to ache.

3. And afflicted with toil he came to his beloved wife and said: " Owing to this exercise my head is aching.

4. And O Sāvitrī, my limbs and the heart also are, as it were, burning. And I feel myself to be uneasy, as it were, dear of measured speech.

5. I feel as if this my head is being pierced with pikes. Therefore, O blessed lady, I wish to sleep, I have no power to stand."

6. That Sāvitrī, quickly advancing and approaching her husband, sat down upon the ground and placed his head upon her lap.

7. Then the poor lady, thinking of the words of Nārada, calculated the time, the day, the hour and the moment.

8. The next moment she saw a person clad in red dress, his head decked with a crown. He had a monstrous body, radiant like the sun.

9. He was of a bright dark hue, had red eyes, carried a noose in his hand and terror in look. He was standing by the side of Satyavān and was steadily staring at him.

10. Seeing him she suddenly got up, placing gently her husband's head (on the earth) and folding her hands spoke with a trembling heart in distress.

Sāvitrī said :

11. I take you to be a deity, because you have a superhuman form. If you will, tell me, O chief of the gods, who you are and what you want to do.

Yama replied :

12. You are devoted to your husband, O Sāvitrī, and you are endowed with asceticism also. Therefore I speak to you; take me to be Yama, O blessed girl.

13. This your husband, Satyavān, a king's son, has lost his life. I am taking him away binding him (in this noose). Know this to be what I want to do.

Sāvitrī said :

14. It is heard that your messengers come to take away mortals, O god. Then, O Lord, why has your reverence come in person?

Mārkandeya continued :

15. Thus addressed, the illustrious lord of the Manes began to tell her everything exactly what his intentions were.

16. "This (prince) is righteous and beautiful and an ocean of merits. He does not deserve to be taken away by servants. So I have come in person."

17. Then Yama forcibly took out of the body of Satyavān a person of the measure of the thumb, bound in noose and brought under control.

18. When the life was taken out, that body, deprived of breath and its lustre gone, became motionless and displeasing to the eyes.

19. Then binding the life, Yama started towards the south and Sāvitrī also, overwhelmed with grief, perfected in her self-restraint and vows, extremely blessed and devoted to her husband, followed Yama.

Yama :

20. Desist and go back, Sāvitrī. Perform the funeral obsequies of your lord. You are free from all your obligations or debt to your husband and you have come as far as it is possible to come.

Sāvitrī :

21. Where my husband is being taken away or whither he goes of his own accord, I must follow him there. This is the eternal custom.

22. On account of asceticism, devotion to elders, love for my lord, my vow and your favour as well, my course is unimpeded.

23. The wise who have realised the truth or true knowledge that by walking seven steps with another one contracteth friendship with one's comrade. Keeping that friendship in view, I shall speak something. Listen to it.

24. Those who have not brought their senses under control cannot perform religious rite in a forest or a city, can acquire no merit by performing sacrifices etc. or leading the life of four orders, celibacy, domesticity, retirement into the woods or renunciation of the world. (वने, धर्मे, वास and परिश्रमं stand for the life of a वानप्रस्थ, a गृहस्थ, a ब्रह्मचर्य and a सन्यासी). The wise declare that the fruit of religious merit consists of true knowledge or self-realisation. (विज्ञानाय धर्मे : इति). The virtuous, therefore, say that religious merit (धर्मे :) is the foremost of all things.

25. By practising the duties of even one of these four orders of life according to the directions of the virtuous (i.e., with devotion and faith without hypocrisy) we have attained to the path of true knowledge. And, therefore, I do not desire the second (celibacy) or third (renunciation) order of life. It is for this that the good have declared religious merit to be the foremost of all things.

Yama :

26. Stop now and go. I am pleased with these your words uttered in proper accents and couched in proper vowels and consonants and based on reasoning. Ask for any boon except the life of this (Satyavān) and I shall give you all that, O girl of flawless soul.

Sāvitrī :

27. Robbed of his own kingdom and bereft of eyes, my father-in-law is living a forest-life in a hermitage. Let that king through thy favour attain his eye-sight and become strong like the fire or the sun.

Yama :

28. O you of blameless conduct, I grant you this boon.

It will be as you said. I see that you are fatigued by your journey. Stop, therefore, and return so that you may not suffer weariness.

Sāvitrī :

29. What weariness can I suffer in the presence of my husband? I should certainly go where my husband is. Where you carry my husband, there I shall also go. O chief of the gods, do you again hear (know) my speech.

30. Even a single meeting with the good is highly desirable and still more so is friendship with them. Thus they declare. Intercoursè with the virtuous can never be fruitless. Therefore, one should live in the company of the righteous.

Yama :

31. The words that you have spoken, the meaning of which is so very beneficial, are delightful to the mind and enhance the wisdom even of the wise. Therefore, O lady, solicit a second boon again, of course, except the life of Satyavān.

Sāvitrī :

32. Let that monarch regain his kingdom of which he, my intelligent father-in-law, was deprived formerly; and may that superior of mine (श्वशुरः) never renounce his duties. This is the second boon that I choose.

Yama :

33. The king shall shortly regain his own kingdom and he shall not swerve from his own duty. Your desire being done by me, O daughter of the king, cease and return so that you may not be tired.

Sāvitrī :

34. All these creatures are restrained by you by your decrees and having restrained them, you take them to the fruit of their actions (निकामया) (If the reading be नकामया it would mean you take them away, not according to your will, but on account of the influence of their own deeds, to enjoy the fruit). Therefore, O god, your Yamatva—nature of being a governor,—is well known. (People call you Yama.) Listen to the words I say.

35. Mildness towards all creatures in thought, word and deed, kindness and charity (giving what is asked for). This is the eternal duty of the virtuous.

36. This world is like this (my husband, i.e., mortal). Men are destitute of power and skill. (अ-शक्ति-पेशला = अशक्ताः अपेशलाः). But the good show mercy even to their foes when they come for it.

Yama :

37. Just as water is to a thirsty soul, so are these words spoken by you. Ask for any boon, O blessed lady, once again whichever you want, except Satyavān's life.

Sāvitrī :

38. That lord of the earth, my father, has no issue. Let him have a hundred sons, born of his loins, who may continue his line. This is the third boon I ask for.

Yama :

39. May your sire, O auspicious girl, obtain a hundred illustrious sons who will perpetuate his line. With your desire fulfilled, O princess, return; you have come far enough.

Savitri :

40. I do not feel the length of the way by the side of my lord. My mind, verily, is running still farther off. While going, listen again to the words that I utter presently.

41. You are the powerful son of Vivaswat (the sun) and so you are called Vaivaswata by the wise (i.e., the son of the Lord of the Universe). And, O lord, on account of your rule ([illegible]) treating all beings equally ([illegible]), you have been called the Lord of Justice.

42. That confidence which one places in the righteous is not placed even in one's own self. Therefore, everybody specially desires intimacy with the righteous.

43. It is on account of the goodness of the heart that confidence, indeed, is inspired in all creatures. Therefore, everybody particularly places confidence in the righteous.

Yama :

44. The words you have uttered, O fair lady, I have not heard from anybody else other than you. I am pleased with this. Except Satyavan's life, solicit a fourth boon and then go away.

Savitri :

45. Both of me and Satyavan's loins, born of both of us, let there be a century of sons, shining with strength and prowess, capable of perpetuating our line. This the fourth boon I beg of you.

Yama :

46. A century of sons, shining with strength and prowess, and causing you great delight, shall be born unto you, O delicate lady. Let there be, O king's daughter, no more weariness to you. Now return. You have already come too far.

Sāvitrī :

47. The good always practise eternal morality. (And so how can I have sons if Your Worship takes away my husband.) So also the good never sink in despondency nor feel grieved. (But act up to their word.) The meeting of the pious with the pious is never futile. Nor is there any danger to the pious from the pious.

48. It is these virtuous souls who by their truth make the sun move and it is they that support the earth by their penance. It is the righteous who are the resort of the past and the future. And, O king, the saintly people are never cheerless in the company of the saints.

49. Knowing this to be the eternal practice of the venerable and virtuous, the good doing good to others never expect anything in return.

50. A favour shown by the good never is fruitless. Neither interest nor respect suffers any injury. Because all these three attributes are ever to be found in the righteous, they always become the protectors of others.

Yama :

51. The more you speak that in which are collected the principles of morality, which is agreeable to the mind, full of honied phrases and pregnant with great meaning, the more is my devotion for you. Ask for an incomparable boon, you chaste lady.

Sāvitrī :

52. The desired object cannot be accomplished by the boon given by you to me without union with my husband. (ऋत्विः). Therefore, O giver of boons, among other boons I ask for this boon: let this Satyavān be brought back to life. I am dead, indeed, without my husband.

53. I do not wish for happiness without my husband, nor do I wish even for heaven without my lord. I want no prosperity without my husband nor do I desire to live without him.

54. You yourself have given me a boon of getting a hundred sons and my husband is being taken away by you yourself. So I choose only this boon: let this Satyavān come to life, for thereby your own words will be true.

Mārkandeya continued :

55. Thereupon saying—'So be it,'—Vivaswat's son, Yama, the dispenser of justice, untied his noose and with a cheerful heart said this to Sāvitrī.

56. Here, O auspicious lady, giving joy to your family, I free your husband. You can take him, being free from disease. He will attain to success.

57. And along with you he will obtain a life of four hundred years. And performing sacrifices with due rites, he will achieve great fame in this world.

58. Satyavān will beget on you a hundred sons and these of the warrior tribe will, with their sons and grandsons, be kings.

59–60. And they will be famous ever in connection with your name. And your father also will have a hundred sons from your mother, Mālavī and they, with their sons and grandsons will always be known by the name of Malavas, your brothers and Kshatriyas, comparable to celestials.

61. Having given these boons to Sāvitrī and asked her to return, the powerful Lord of Justice went to his own abode.

Thus ends the Chapter Fifth

CHAPTER VI

SATYAVAN REGAINING CONSCIOUSNESS

1. Yama having gone, Sāvitrī, obtaining the soul of her husband went where the dark corpse of her husband lay.

2. Seeing her husband on the ground, she approached him and taking hold of him, she placed his head on her lap and sat down on the ground.

3. Satyavān, regaining consciousness and eyeing her lovingly again and again like one returned after a long journey, said to her.

Satyavān :

4. Alas ! I slept so long ! Why was I not awakened ? And whither is that dark man who was dragging me gone ?

Sāvitrī :

5. You slept very long on my lap, O bull among men. That revered god, Yama, the ruler of creatures, has gone away.

6. You are refreshed, O fortunate prince, and your sleep has gone. If possible, rise up. See the night is advancing.

Mārkandeya continued :

7. Then getting consciousness and rising up like one who had a happy sleep, Satyavān saw all the quarters and the woods and said :

8. I came out with you, O dear of slender waist, to collect fruits and then, while hewing wood I had a headache.

9. Intensely troubled by the heat of the headache and unable to stand any longer, I slept on your lap; I remember all this, auspicious wife.

10. My mind, then, as I was embraced by you, was taken away by sleep and then, I saw terrible darkness and a man of great effulgence.

11. If you know it, tell me, O you of slender waist, what it was. Whether it was a dream seen by me or whether it was a reality.

12. Then Sāvitrī said to him: "The night is deepening. Tomorrow, O prince, I shall tell you all as it happened.

13. Rise, get up! May it be well with you! See your parents, my lord of excellent vows. This night is deepening. The sun has already gone.

14. These night-rangers of cruel voices are moving about in joy. And the sounds of leaves and of animals treading through the woods are being heard.

15. These terrible female jackals, resorting to the south-west, are giving out horrible shrieks and causing my heart to tremble."

Satyavān :

16. Enveloped in pitchy darkness the forest wears a fearful aspect. You will not discern the path and you cannot go.

Sāvitrī :

17. In this forest which was on fire today, there stands a dry tree that is burning. This fire also being blown by wind is seen in some places.

18. Consequently I shall bring some fire and burn here all round. Here are these faggots. You do remove your anxiety.

19. (I will do this) if you are not able to go for I see that you are unwell and will not discern the track in this forest covered in darkness.

20. Tomorrow morning when the woods become visible, we shall go hence if you so wish. We shall stay here for one night if, O sinless one, that be your liking.

Satyavān :

21. The pain in my head is gone and I feel my limbs quite at ease. I wish to have the company, born of your favour, of my mother and father.

22. Never before did I return to the hermitage after the proper time. Even before the evening is gone, my mother prohibits me.

23. Even when I go out by day my parents become anxious and my father searches for me with all the inhabitants of the hermitage.

24. Before this, by my parents, extremely grieved, was I taunted many a time, saying; " Thou comest very late."

25. What, indeed, may be their condition for me today is what I am thinking of. If I am not seen by them, they will be very highly grieved.

26. One night before this, the old parents, endowed with great love for me, were greatly grieved and with tears in their eyes said to me.

27. "Deprived of thee, O dear son, we cannot live even for a moment. As long as thou livest, so long we also live for certain.

28. Thou art the light of these blind old parents; in thee is established our family. On thee depends our funeral rice-ball, our fame and the continuity of our line."

29. My mother is old, the father is old and I am, indeed, their crutch. To what condition will they go if they see me not in the night?

30. I hate this my slumber on account of which my father and my unoffending mother have been brought to peril for my sake.

31. I, too, have been thrown into this risk and brought to this painful calamity. I cannot bear to breathe without my parents.

32. It is certain that my blind father with a disconsolate mind, is asking about me by this time every one of the inhabitants of the hermitage.

33. I do not so much grieve for myself, O blessed wife, as I do for my sire and for my weak mother also, following her lord.

34. Surely on my account they will go great grief today. I live only so long as they live. They must be supported by me, indeed. And I know, too, that I must do what is pleasing to them.

Mārkandeya said :

35. Saying thus, that virtuous soul ever devoted to and fond of, his parents,

36–37. Afflicted with grief, held up his hands and wept aloud in woeful accents. Then seeing her lord tormented with grief in that way, the righteous Sāvitrī, wiping off the tears from his eyes, said: "If I practised penance, if I gave away in charity, if I sacrificed,

38. Then may this night be propitious for my father-in-law, mother-in-law and husband. I do not, indeed, remember to have told a lie even in jest. Let by virtue of that troth my father-in-law and the mother-in-law hold their lives."

Satyavān said :

39. I long for the sight of my parents. Proceed, Sāvitrī, do not tarry any longer.

40. If I find any evil falling on my mother and father, I touch my soul with truth (swear), O elegant beauty, I will not live.

41. If you have any regard for virtue, if you want me to live, if what is pleasing to me should be done, let us reach the hermitage by the nearest way.

Mārkandeya continued :

42. Then the noble Sāvitrī, rising up and tying her hair, raised her husband, holding him in her arms.

43. And Satyavān also, having risen up and rubbed his limbs with his hands, cast his eyes in all quarters and caught sight of his wallet.

44. Then Sāvitrī said unto him: "You will collect fruits tomorrow. For your ease and safety I shall carry this your axe."

45. Then hanging up the wallet with the contents upon the bough of a tree, and taking up the axe she came back to her husband.

46. And then, placing her lord's left arm on her left shoulder and embracing him with her right arm, that lady of beautiful thighs proceeded (slowly) with elephant's gait.

Satyavān said :

47. The paths, O timid one, are well-known to me on account of my frequently coming here. And by the moon-light seen between the trees also I can discern them.

48. We have reached the path along which we gathered fruits. Proceed by the way that we had come, O auspicious lady. Feel no doubt.

49. In this grove of Palāsha trees the path diverges into two. Go by the way that lies to the north of it and hurry up.

50. I feel quite well now and have resumed my strength. I long to see both my parents. While still saying this, Satyavān in great haste arrived at his hermitage.

Thus ends the Chapter Sixth

CHAPTER VII

THE LAMENTATION OF THE PARENTS

Mārkandeya said :

1. At this very time, indeed, the mighty Dyumatsena, obtain his eye-sight and his vision being clear, he could see everything.

2. Having gone to every hermitage in the company of his wife, Shaibyā, in search of his son, O best of Bharatas, he was in great distress.

3. That night the (old) couple went about searching hermitages, rivers, woods and lakes.

4. Hearing any sound whatever they would raise their heads and expecting their son they would say: "Here comes Satyavan with Sāvitrī."

5. They would rush as if they were mad with their feet torn, cracked, wounded and bleeding and their bodies pierced with thorns and blades of Kusha grass.

6. Then all the Brāhmanas dwelling in the hermitage came to them and surrounding them on all sides, comforted them and brought them back to their own asylum.

7. There he with his wife, surrounded by aged ascetics was cheered up with wonderful stories of former kings.

8. Then the old couple, even when consoled, recollecting the incidents of their son in early age, was extremely grieved.

9. And afflicted with grief they began to utter piteous cries of "Alas, O son, alas, O chaste daughter-in-law, where are you? Where are you?" and wept. Then a Brāhmana of truthful speech from amongst them said to them.

Suvarchas said :

10. As his wife, Sāvitrī, is endowed with penance, self-restraint and good conduct, Satyavān does live.

Gautama said :

11. Vedas with their members have been studied by me and great ascetic merit is collected by me. And I have practised a strictly celibate vow and gratified the Fire-god and superiors.

12. With an attentive mind I have ever observed all the vows. I have observed fast, living upon air alone according to rites.

13. By virtue of this penance I know all the doings desired by others. You, therefore, take it for certain that Satyavān lives.

His disciple said :

14. As the words fallen from the lips of my preceptor can never be false, Satyavān liveth.

The Seers said :

15. As his wife, Sāvitrī, is endowed with all the good marks indicating immunity from widowhood, Satyavān lives.

Bharadwāja said :

16. As his wife, Sāvitrī is accomplished in asceticism, restraint, and chastity, I am sure Satyavān liveth.

Dālbhya said :

17. Since the sight has risen in you and since Sāvitrī has gone without food according to her vow, Satyavān lives.

Apastamba said :

18. As in all the quarters which are clear and still, the voices of birds and beasts are rising and as your behaviour has ever been worthy of a king, Satyavān breathes.

Dhaumya said :

19. As your son is possessed of all the virtues and as he is loved by people and endowed with signs of long life, I am certain Satyavān lives.

Mārkandeya said :

20. Thus consoled by those ascetics of truthful word Dyumatsena, pondering over all points, was a little composed.

21. A moment after this Sāvitrī with her husband, Satyavān, reached the hermitage in the night and entered it in joy.

Thus ends the Chapter Seventh

CHAPTER VIII

THE MEETING OF THE PARENTS AND THE SON

Brāhmanas said:

1. Beholding this meeting with your son and restoration of your vision, we all wish you prosperity, O lord of the earth.

2. We congratulate you on the threefold growth, namely, the meeting of your son, the sight of Sāvitrī and the acquisition of your vision.

3. What was said by all of us has come to pass. There is no doubt. Henceforth you will rapidly grow in prosperity.

4. Then all those twice-born lighted a fire there and sat round near the lord of the earth, Dyumatsena, O son of Kunti:

5. Shaibyā and Satyavān and Sāvitrī, standing apart, sat down with their grief gone, permitted by all of them.

6. Then all those dwellers of the forest, sitting with the king, asked, O son of Prithā, the son of the king through curiosity.

The Sages said:

7. Why did you not come earlier with your wife, O eminent prince? Why did you come late in the night? What obstacle had you?

8. We do not know, O prince, why you alarmed your father, mother, and the whole forest. Please tell us all that.

Satyavān said :

9. Being permitted by the father I went to the forest with Sāvitrī. Then while cutting wood in the forest, I had head-ache.

10. And on account of pain, I slept long. This is what I know. I never slept so long before.

11. So that all of you might not be grieved, I came so late in the night. There is no other cause for this.

Gautama said :

12. You do not know why your father got his vision all of a sudden. It behoves Sāvitrī to tell us this.

13. I wish to hear this, Sāvitrī, because you know the principles of good and evil. I know that you are, O Sāvitrī, as it were the goddess Sāvitrī—the progenitrix of Vedas—herself in splendour.

14. You know the cause of this. Therefore, let it be told truly. If it is no secret of yours, tell us something about it.

Sāvitrī said :

15. It is surely as you know. Your wish is not otherwise, indeed. I have no secret. Please listen to the exact truth.

16. The death of my husband had been foretold by the high-souled Nārada, and today was the appointed day and, therefore, I did not leave him alone.

17. And when he was asleep, Yama in person approached him with his messengers. He began to take him away, tying him in his noose, towards the direction inhabited by the Manes.

18. I praised that mighty god with truthful words. And he gave me five boons and hear them from me.

19. The eye-sight and his own kingdom: these two boons for my father-in-law; a hundred sons to my father and a hundred sons to myself have been obtained.

20. And my lord, Satyavān, has obtained a life of four hundred years. It was for the life of my husband that I observed this vow.

21. This is the whole cause related to you by me in detail. I have also told you how this great misfortune resulted in happiness.

The Sages said:

22. O chaste lady, by you of excellent disposition, good vows and high merit and noble birth, was rescued this family, indeed, of illustrious kings, this family which was sinking in a pool of darkness and overwhelmed with calamities.

Mārkandeya continued:

23. Having thus praised and reverenced that excellent lady, those seers assembled there bade farewell to the best of kings as well as his son and speedily went home in peace and joy.

Thus ends the Chapter Eighth

CHAPTER IX

ACQUISITION OF PROSPERITY BY THE LUSTROUS POWER OF SĀVITRĪ

Mārkaṇḍeya said :

1. When that night had passed away and the orb of the sun had risen, all those ascetics, having performed their morning rites, assembled together.

2. Those great sages were not satisfied with relating again and again to Dyumatsena all the great fortune of Sāvitrī.

3. Then all the subjects, O king, came from Shālva and told that the enemy was killed by his own minister.

4. They related as it happened that the troops of the enemy, hearing that their master was killed together with his allies and relations, fled away.

5. And also that all the people were unanimous in their opinion regarding the king that he should be our king whether with vision or without it.

6. With this resolve we have been, O king, sent here and these cars and this army of yours consisting of four kinds—viz., infantry, cavalry, elephants and chariots, have arrived.

7. Do go, king; may it be all well with you! Your victory has been proclaimed in the city. Do you occupy for ever the seat of your father and grandfather (hereditary).

8. Seeing the king possessed of eye-sight and strong in body, they all bowed down with their heads, their eyes expanding with wonder.

9. Then bowing down to all the old Brāhmanas, living in hermitages, and being honoured by them all, Dyumatsena set off towards the city.

10. And Shaibyā also, accompanied by Sāvitrī, started, surrounded by army, in a vehicle borne by men (palanquin) furnished with brilliant sheets.

11. Then the priests installed (by sprinkling holy water on his head) through love Dyumatsena as the king and his high-souled son as the crown prince.

12. Then during a long period of time Sāvitrī gave birth to a hundred sons who enhanced the fame of the family and were brave and never turned away from battle.

13. And in the same way she had a century of highly powerful uterine brothers, born to Aswapati, the lord of Madras, by Mālavī.

14. Thus did Sāvitrī raise from the pitiable condition herself, her father, her mother-in-law, her father-in-law and the whole family of her husband.

15. In the same way this blessed daughter of Drupada, highly esteemed for her character, will rescue you all like Sāvitrī, the noble lady.

Vaishampāyana said:

16. Thus that son of Pāndu, Yudhishthira, appeased by the high-souled, O king, lived in the forest of Kāmyaka, being free from grief and anxiety.

57 The man that listeneth with devotion to this excellent legendary story of Sāvitrī will be happy and successful in all undertakings and will not meet with misery.

Thus ends the episode of Sāvitrī in the section of the greatness of chastity in the Forest division of the revered great epic.
